

STRIKE MAY SOON END ON WAITERS' COMPROMISE AFTER A SPLIT IN UNION

Executive Chairman Is Suspended for Wanting Strikers' Return Without Recognition.

DOWNTOWN WALK-OUT

Haan Employees Quit, but Mouquin Throws Waiters Out and Closes Restaurant.

Signs that the strike of the hotel and restaurant waiters is approaching a settlement were not wanting to-day. Disensions among the officers of the union came to the surface and resulted in the suspension of the chairman of the executive committee, W. P. Mueller, and his denunciation at a mass meeting of union waiters at Bryant Hall. Mueller has many followers in the union, however, who are in favor of a plan he has advanced for the ending of the strike.

The head waiters, who employ and discharge all the waiters, have taken a hand in the situation. They have offered to step in and aid in getting around the question of union recognition, but agreeing to employ none but union waiters, but with the provision that the hotel owners and managers shall not be asked to make any such agreement. A conference between a committee of strikers and the hotel men will be held on this point. Many of the head waiters predict the settlement of the strike within twenty-four hours.

The strike extended to the downtown restaurants to-day. Mouquin's in Ann street was closed by the proprietors after all the union waiters had been ordered out of the place. Fifty waiters and a few cooks struck at Haan's in the Park Row Building.

Henri Mouquin knew that the union leaders had planned to order a strike in his place at noon. At 11:45 o'clock he assembled 108 waiters in the main restaurant and asked them if they had any grievances.

"We want the union to be recognized," said one of the men.

"I'll go out of business before I recognize a union of waiters," said the proprietor. "All you men who belong to the union consider yourselves discharged and get out in a hurry. I don't want you around the place."

Only eighteen waiters remained loyal. The other 90 hurried into their street clothes and marched out of the restaurant. Albert, the head bartender, tumbled some of the older employees about leaving good jobs, and one of them hit him on the bridge of the nose to such good effect that he exhibited a fine pair of black eyes to patrons of the bar in less than an hour.

Lines of chairs were placed across the open doors on the Fulton and Ann street sides of the restaurant, and Louis Mouquin was kept busy explaining to old patrons that the restaurant would be closed until further notice. The Mouquin's were closed.

HORSE'S MAD DASH AMONG CHILDREN; BOY BADLY HURT

POLICEMAN RISKS LIFE.

Grabs at Reins as Three Thousand Pupils Flee From Runaway in Williamsburg.

A boy was mortally injured and a dozen persons were bowled over and more or less cut and bruised this afternoon in the course of the plunging flight along Boerum street, Williamsburg, of a horse attached to a dilapidated delivery wagon.

Three thousand children were pouring out of Public School No. 143 at Leonard and Boerum streets just as the horse bolted from in front of a shop about a block from the school. The first person to suffer from the runaway was Samuel Goldstein of No. 146 McKibbin street, who was delivering a dozen crates of eggs at No. 124 Boerum street. He was on his wagon when the galloping horse swung the vehicle behind him against his wagon and smashed its wheel base. Goldstein was pitched off on his head and almost smothered in a yellow flood of eggs and shells. His head was badly cut and he lay unconscious until picked up and carried into a drug store.

Another butter and egg wagon came to grief a few doors further on and the driver of this vehicle, William McKennie, was spilled off amid the same oozy wreckage and almost drowned in an onrush of his own eggs.

When the runaway plunged toward the school children, four-year-old Abraham Descant stumbled almost under the heels of the horse, was struck by a wheel and suffered a fracture of the skull and internal injuries. Two women who rushed out to rescue the child were overthrown but escaped serious hurt.

During the last blocks of the frightened animal's dash, it ran into a congestion of push carts, wrecked half a dozen and brushed the owners into the gutters.

By the time the captured horse was taken to the Stagg street station, the injured boy had been removed to St. Catherine's Hospital, where it was said he was likely to die.

There was no name on the wagon, and after the excitement had subsided no one came to claim it. The police think the owner will not call for it, fearing to accept the responsibility of damage suits.

POLICEMAN'S BRAVE EFFORT TO STOP ANIMAL.

The first effort to check the runaway was made by Policeman Edward Ruppel of the Stagg street station, who was stationed at the school crossing. Seeing the children back to the pavements, he leaped for the horse's head and caught the bridle. The next instant he was flung off his feet and dragged along the asphalt for a block. When he let go he managed to bounce up on his feet, pursue the wagon and jump up behind. Then he climbed out on the horse's back and got a strangle hold of the bit. He was assisted in pulling down the horse by Policeman Carroll.

BROOKLYN BRIDGE "L" TIED UP BY RUNAWAY HORSE.

A runaway horse caused a blockade of elevated trains on the Brooklyn Bridge today, tying up traffic for nearly an hour, during which time stalled trains extended along the tracks from Brooklyn to Manhattan and back to Brooklyn again. The accident occurred at the Brooklyn end when the frozen runaway, at whose reins two strong young men pulled vainly, leaped upon the bridge used as a "cup over" for trolley cars, on the same grade with the elevated train tracks, and dashed along the trolley. At the first jump upon the ties the horse was freed from the restraining harness, but not until it had dragged the peddlers' wagon it was hauling, part way up the trestle. The two men, Patrick Connor of No. 27 Sixteenth street, Brooklyn, and his helper, Edward Brennan of the same address, were catapulted from their seat, clear out on the roadway. Both were knocked senseless.

The runaway horse galloped up the bridge and then, with a final leap, landed in the water.

BOOM FOR GAYNOR SAID TO BE BACKED BY $20,000 FUND

Member of Mayor's Cabinet Admits That a Strong Committee Is at Work.

MANY VOTES CLAIMED.

Delegates From New England States Expected to Rally Round the Mayor.

It was said to-day by a member of Mayor Gaynor's cabinet that a fund of more than $20,000 had been raised in New York to promote the cause of the Mayor in the race for the nomination for President. Several lieutenants are at work in other States in the interest of the Mayor.

It was stated with equal emphasis and equal positiveness that the Mayor has not been informed of the activity in his behalf.

According to this commissioner, who asked an Evening World reporter not to mention his name, there is in existence a Gaynor Presidential committee, comprised chiefly of members of his municipal cabinet. Added to this committee are the names of several New York financiers. Men like John D. Crimmins, it is stated, are heartily in favor of the Mayor's nomination, and several have said that his personality and ability represent the only compromise possible at Baltimore.

The work of the committee thus far has been to send representatives into such States as Massachusetts, Connecticut, Indiana, North Dakota, Alabama and such States as are favorable to a favorite son. The delegates in the States are being impressed with the availability of the Mayor as a compromise candidate.

ALL OF NEW ENGLAND IS CLAIMED FOR GAYNOR.

It was stated to-day the Mayor was reasonably assured of the entire New England delegation. In Alabama a tremendous sentiment in favor of New York's Mayor has been awakened since the return to the South of Gov. Emmet O'Neal, who was the Mayor's guest here the day of the police parade.

The Evening World's informant also referred to the visit of Commissioner Joe Johnson to his old home in Georgia, where the former Acorn went to settle his father's estate. It was said that Baltimore of the type of Morgan J. O'Brien, Alton B. Parker, William F. Sheehan and John B. Stinchfield are strongly in favor of Mayor Gaynor. They believe he can carry New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, which would be half the battle.

The nominee is certain to be Gaynor if not Bryan," said Assemblyman J. J. Decker of Brooklyn, who returned today from a Western trip. "You recall that the last time the Commoner was here he and the Mayor met at least three times. Their friendship is well known and as far as I am able to judge, Mr. Bryan would support New York's Mayor. Wherever I have been in the West I have found much Gaynor sentiment."

Various heads of the city government, when asked to-day what had been done in the Mayor's behalf, answered that any information would be "top secret."

ed upon the tracks used by the elevated trains, running parallel. Down between the openings in the ties went the animal's legs, the third rail being but a few inches distant. Lying directly in the path of all incoming Brooklyn elevated trains crossing the bridge, this branch of the bridge traffic was tied up effectively by the body of the horse. Ropes, planks, pulleys and an emergency derrick were quickly applied in the effort to remove the animal, but the struggles of the horse prevented effective work. It was finally decided to shoot the animal and relieve it of its agonies. Then the body was hauled upon the bridge and carried away.

In the meantime, the Rev. V. A. Mortenson, President of the Society of Inner Mission and Rescue Work, at No. 56 Pine street, hurried to the prostrate man, offering relief. Both Connor and Brennan were carried to the Emergency Hospital on the Brooklyn side and treated by Ambulance Surgeon Heibel of the Brooklyn Hospital. Connor was sent to the hospital.

PAULA OSTERMAN

SHIRT AND GOOD-BY NOTE IS FOUND NEAR RIVER.

A No. 15 shirt with a paper bag pinned to it, upon which was penciled a farewell message, was found to-day on the west bank of the Harlem River, between one Hundred and Fifty-third and One Hundred and Fifty-fourth streets, by Patrolman C. E. Kelly. On one side of the paper bag was written: "Death is better than this life—M. Donovan, 21 Greenwich St."

On the other side was scrawled: "Goodbye all—and to you, Billy Burke, although I do owe you money. I leave this world to you. JOE STEVEN."

The police of the West One Hundred and Fifty-second street station believe some one committed suicide or that a practical joker had planted the shirt there. The garment has a pale pink running through the cloth. The bag was attached with a safety pin. Lord was sent to the Greenwich street address, but no one there seemed to know anything about the matter.

TAFT FORCES CONTROL OHIO CENTRAL COMMITTEE

COLUMBUS, O., June 3.—The Taft forces will control the new State Central Committee. They won in eleven districts and the Roosevelt men won in ten of the twenty-one district meetings preliminary to the State convention here late this afternoon.

absolutely nothing doing at the present time.

The early scenes of the little age-old drama lie in Woodhaven. Ever since they can remember, Paula and Milton were in love. He carried her home to school, and she wore sweet nothings on little slips of paper and passed them down the aisle to him. It was all settled, at the age of ten, that they were going to be married. But how didn't matter, so long as it was done. Their parents smiled at first and allowed them to be constantly in each other's company, for they lived only a block apart. Then Mr. Osterman took Paula to Europe and kept her away from Milton, who professed indifference until she returned, when they were seen together again. Later, Milton had been in the habit of running up in the evening to see Mrs. Osterman, because Paula was lonely and Papa Osterman is in Europe. "It's better this way than if they were running around on the street at night," thought Mrs. Osterman and she let him.

Love's young dream, which led pretty blonde, vivacious Paula Osterman, fifteen years old, of Woodhaven, L. I., to elope on Memorial Day with her "soul's desire," Milton Hahn, who is a whole month older than she is going to be shattered, if the foretold words and ominous consequences of the elopers' parents mean anything.

Last night Paula Hahn, father of the youthful Locomotive, received a telegram which means the "day sweethearts are probably wandering beside some babbling brook in New England, figuring out what they will do when the time comes to take the matter. The telegram, dated Boston, read:

"Dear Mom and Pop, Paula and I are married. Don't worry."

But Mr. Hahn is worrying and intends to make his son worry some, too. For Milton dipped into the Hahn family checkbook for $475, which annoys Paula Hahn more than a little. Besides, he warned Milton he was too young to think of marrying for some time, and that, although Paula was a nice little girl and years from now he hadn't got over it by then, there was

Three Prisoners Accused of Firing on "Big Jack" Zelig, Gang Leader, as He Left Criminal Courts, Are Watched to Foil Rescue Attempt.

SENSATIONAL ATTACK IS SEQUEL TO EARLY BATTLE

Fight Over Chinatown Queen Is Followed by Shooting of Feudist in Midst of Noonday Crowd.

The terrorism of the gangsters, which began with a wholesale pistol fusillade on the fringe of Chinatown in the dark hours of the morning and dared even to the point of shooting to kill "Big Jack" Zelig, one of the gang leaders, as he was leaving the Centre Street Court near noon to-day, caused Police Headquarters to adopt measures this afternoon that would almost fit a city in rebellion.

No less than forty detectives, "strong-arms" and uniformed policemen surrounded three men arrested in connection with the shooting of Zelig when they were taken to the Centre Street Court for arraignment. They were conducted from Headquarters to the court in a police automobile which was a moving arsenal.

When Charles Torti, Louis Bull and Victor Marrino, three of the toughest members of the Morroco gang, were being examined at Headquarters after the shooting, Inspector Hughes got the tip from some of his men that other members of the gang had declared the three would never get to court. Therefore the Inspector laid his plans of precaution.

He had the three, each handcuffed to a detective, bundled into the auto patrol wagon. Five detectives, each with his gun in an outside pocket and his right hand slipped into that pocket, sat beside the prisoners in the van. Six or seven more detectives, their guns handy, walked on either side of the slow moving vehicle down Centre street to the Criminal Courts Building. The machine moved so slowly the detectives afoot could keep up with it.

Charles Torti, alias Frank Caputo, the man believed to have shot Zelig, Victor Marrino and a third man, who gave his name to the police as John Doe, but who was subsequently identified as Louis Bull, were arrested by Headquarters detectives immediately after the shooting of Zelig.

Zelig, who gave his name as John Albert, Jacob Miller and Baker Harris were held by Magistrate McDoo in the graver charge of attempted assault, growing out of the Chinatown shooting, and Charles Murphy, called "Chick" Frigger, and James Montello had bail fixed at $500 apiece on the lesser crime of disorderly conduct. When Zelig's lawyer, Louis Stiegel, appeared with the necessary bond, Zelig was released and started for Stiegel's office in the lawyer's company.

In Stiegel's office Zelig collapsed and the lawyer barricaded the door with book cases and other office furniture. The three who had started up the stairs dropped a pistol, with three chambers exploded, turned and tried to duck out into the crowd. But headquarters detectives Richard Oliver and James Nolan, who had witnessed the shooting from the steps, nabbed them and rushed them around to the Elizabeth street station.

The lawyer had just stepped into the doorway when the three shots sounded behind the gang leader. Clapping his hand to his neck, Zelig plunged through the door and up the stairs. Three men were seen to pursue them.

Dr. McGuire, the prison physician from the Tombs, had also seen the shooting and he hurried up to Stiegel's office to give first aid.

He had difficulty persuading Stiegel, who was in great terror, to remove the barricades from the door.

"Doc, I guess they got me that time," whispered Zelig, as the physician bent over him. "But I don't do no squealing. I'll get hunk in my own way, if I don't kick off."

Further than this Zelig refused to make any statement to the detectives, when they questioned him.

"I don't know who shot me and I don't care," he added.

Then he was taken to the Tombs.

SAY HE CHAINED UP DAUGHTER AND BEAT HER WITH STRAP

Fourteen-year-old Jennie Hampton of No. 314 East One Hundred and Eighth street appeared in the Harlem Court to-day before Magistrate Herrman as complainant against her father, William Hampton, who is charged with unlawfully chaining her up and beating her with a strap. The girl testified her right and left arm bruised, and agents for the Children's Society said there were scars on her body. For several days neighbors of the Hampton family have heard the girl's voice raised in entreaty when her father was beating her. Last night the father, who is a widower, came home for supper, but did not find Jennie there. The girl came in about 9:30 and refused to tell where she had been.

When her father, it is alleged, chained her up and beat her with a belt having a heavy buckle, she remained chained until daylight, when she escaped and went up four flights on the fire escape to Mrs. Claff's flat, where she was taken care of.

Magistrate Herrman held Hampton in $500 bail for trial in the Court of Special Sessions.
